

ATTACK OF PET MONKEY FATAL TO GREEK KING

(Continued from first page.)

would establish unity of feeling among the Greeks and greater security to the empire forces then operating in Thrace in the summer of 1920, entering Adrianople, which had been surrendered to the Greek troops, amid a great demonstration.

Alexander was bitten October 3 by the monkey while endeavoring to protect his dog from an attack. His wound became infected, and several operations for the removal of flesh were performed.

Constantine left Athens and took up his residence in Switzerland.

Alexander took the oath of office at Athens in August, 1917, and promised to carry out the policy of his father. This was said to have shocked the entente powers. It soon was reported that he was at odds with Premier Venizelos and had refused to abandon his idea of continuing his father's program. Some doubts were raised as to the advisability of permitting him to assume the throne unless he discontinued what was characterized as an obstructive policy.

Friction Denied.

Reports of lack of harmony between Alexander and Venizelos were circulated in the spring of 1920 but the premier disposed of these in a statement in which he paid tribute to the king's patriotism. One respect in which the king and his premier were said to have been at odds was over the king's moribund marriage to Mile Manos, daughter of a former aide-de-camp to his father, which is said to have taken place in November, 1919. No record of the marriage was obtainable.

The young king and his morganatic wife were childhood friends and sweethearts. Alexander asserted that he had a right to marry whomever he pleased and took his bride to the palace in Athens.

This aroused a storm of discussion which so displeased his wife that in the early part of 1920 she went with her mother and sister to live in Paris and Alexander visited her there in the following May. It was announced that the Greek constitution did not grant him permission to enter upon the morganatic marriage and that action by the Greek parliament would be necessary to determine whether Mile Manos could become queen of Greece or remain the king's official consort. Alexander's refusal to give up his wife was said to have greatly worried Venizelos and there were reports that the king could not return to Greece. He did so, however, and witnessed Greek operations in Thrace in the summer of 1920, entering Adrianople, which had been surrendered to the Greek troops, amid a great demonstration.

Woman With Cow Wants To Walk To Little Rock

MRS. STELLA DANIELS.

Unable to find her 15-year-old father in Memphis, Mrs. Stella Daniels, who walked here from Little Rock, Ark., leading a cow, now wants to make the return journey on foot, taking her cow with her. The father came to Memphis to see newspapers and to wait for his daughter.

Mrs. L. Whitmore, officer of the Woman's Protective bureau, who found Mrs. Daniels and gave her lodging in the women's quarters at police headquarters, will not permit this if Mrs. Daniels can be persuaded to remain in Memphis. Several persons have offered to give the woman and her cow a home. Mrs. Daniels will not be separated from the cow. She came here to sell milk, she said, having heard that Memphis was a city of great opportunity.

But Mrs. Daniels is searching for her aged father, a veteran of the Civil war, whose name is Barker. She has heard that he is in Memphis.

There were reports that the king

could not return to Greece. He did so, however, and witnessed Greek operations in Thrace in the summer of 1920, entering Adrianople, which had been surrendered to the Greek troops, amid a great demonstration.

Alexander was bitten October 3 by the monkey while endeavoring to protect his dog from an attack. His wound became infected, and several operations for the removal of flesh were performed.

Constantine left Athens and took up his residence in Switzerland.

Alexander took the oath of office at Athens in August, 1917, and promised to carry out the policy of his father. This was said to have shocked the entente powers. It soon was reported that he was at odds with Premier Venizelos and had refused to abandon his idea of continuing his father's program. Some doubts were raised as to the advisability of permitting him to assume the throne unless he discontinued what was characterized as an obstructive policy.

Friction Denied.

Reports of lack of harmony between Alexander and Venizelos were circulated in the spring of 1920 but the premier disposed of these in a statement in which he paid tribute to the king's patriotism. One respect in which the king and his premier were said to have been at odds was over the king's moribund marriage to Mile Manos, daughter of a former aide-de-camp to his father, which is said to have taken place in November, 1919. No record of the marriage was obtainable.

The young king and his morganatic wife were childhood friends and sweethearts. Alexander asserted that he had a right to marry whomever he pleased and took his bride to the palace in Athens.

This aroused a storm of discussion which so displeased his wife that in the early part of 1920 she went with her mother and sister to live in Paris and Alexander visited her there in the following May. It was announced that the Greek constitution did not grant him permission to enter upon the morganatic marriage and that action by the Greek parliament would be necessary to determine whether Mile Manos could become queen of Greece or remain the king's official consort. Alexander's refusal to give up his wife was said to have greatly worried Venizelos and there were reports that the king

could not return to Greece. He did so, however, and witnessed Greek operations in Thrace in the summer of 1920, entering Adrianople, which had been surrendered to the Greek troops, amid a great demonstration.

Alexander was bitten October 3 by the monkey while endeavoring to protect his dog from an attack. His wound became infected, and several operations for the removal of flesh were performed.

Constantine left Athens and took up his residence in Switzerland.

Alexander took the oath of office at Athens in August, 1917, and promised to carry out the policy of his father. This was said to have shocked the entente powers. It soon was reported that he was at odds with Premier Venizelos and had refused to abandon his idea of continuing his father's program. Some doubts were raised as to the advisability of permitting him to assume the throne unless he discontinued what was characterized as an obstructive policy.

Friction Denied.

Reports of lack of harmony between Alexander and Venizelos were circulated in the spring of 1920 but the premier disposed of these in a statement in which he paid tribute to the king's patriotism. One respect in which the king and his premier were said to have been at odds was over the king's moribund marriage to Mile Manos, daughter of a former aide-de-camp to his father, which is said to have taken place in November, 1919. No record of the marriage was obtainable.

The young king and his morganatic wife were childhood friends and sweethearts. Alexander asserted that he had a right to marry whomever he pleased and took his bride to the palace in Athens.

This aroused a storm of discussion which so displeased his wife that in the early part of 1920 she went with her mother and sister to live in Paris and Alexander visited her there in the following May. It was announced that the Greek constitution did not grant him permission to enter upon the morganatic marriage and that action by the Greek parliament would be necessary to determine whether Mile Manos could become queen of Greece or remain the king's official consort. Alexander's refusal to give up his wife was said to have greatly worried Venizelos and there were reports that the king

could not return to Greece. He did so, however, and witnessed Greek operations in Thrace in the summer of 1920, entering Adrianople, which had been surrendered to the Greek troops, amid a great demonstration.

Alexander was bitten October 3 by the monkey while endeavoring to protect his dog from an attack. His wound became infected, and several operations for the removal of flesh were performed.

Constantine left Athens and took up his residence in Switzerland.

Alexander took the oath of office at Athens in August, 1917, and promised to carry out the policy of his father. This was said to have shocked the entente powers. It soon was reported that he was at odds with Premier Venizelos and had refused to abandon his idea of continuing his father's program. Some doubts were raised as to the advisability of permitting him to assume the throne unless he discontinued what was characterized as an obstructive policy.

Friction Denied.

Reports of lack of harmony between Alexander and Venizelos were circulated in the spring of 1920 but the premier disposed of these in a statement in which he paid tribute to the king's patriotism. One respect in which the king and his premier were said to have been at odds was over the king's moribund marriage to Mile Manos, daughter of a former aide-de-camp to his father, which is said to have taken place in November, 1919. No record of the marriage was obtainable.

The young king and his morganatic wife were childhood friends and sweethearts. Alexander asserted that he had a right to marry whomever he pleased and took his bride to the palace in Athens.

This aroused a storm of discussion which so displeased his wife that in the early part of 1920 she went with her mother and sister to live in Paris and Alexander visited her there in the following May. It was announced that the Greek constitution did not grant him permission to enter upon the morganatic marriage and that action by the Greek parliament would be necessary to determine whether Mile Manos could become queen of Greece or remain the king's official consort. Alexander's refusal to give up his wife was said to have greatly worried Venizelos and there were reports that the king

could not return to Greece. He did so, however, and witnessed Greek operations in Thrace in the summer of 1920, entering Adrianople, which had been surrendered to the Greek troops, amid a great demonstration.

Alexander was bitten October 3 by the monkey while endeavoring to protect his dog from an attack. His wound became infected, and several operations for the removal of flesh were performed.

Constantine left Athens and took up his residence in Switzerland.

Alexander took the oath of office at Athens in August, 1917, and promised to carry out the policy of his father. This was said to have shocked the entente powers. It soon was reported that he was at odds with Premier Venizelos and had refused to abandon his idea of continuing his father's program. Some doubts were raised as to the advisability of permitting him to assume the throne unless he discontinued what was characterized as an obstructive policy.

Friction Denied.

Reports of lack of harmony between Alexander and Venizelos were circulated in the spring of 1920 but the premier disposed of these in a statement in which he paid tribute to the king's patriotism. One respect in which the king and his premier were said to have been at odds was over the king's moribund marriage to Mile Manos, daughter of a former aide-de-camp to his father, which is said to have taken place in November, 1919. No record of the marriage was obtainable.

The young king and his morganatic wife were childhood friends and sweethearts. Alexander asserted that he had a right to marry whomever he pleased and took his bride to the palace in Athens.

This aroused a storm of discussion which so displeased his wife that in the early part of 1920 she went with her mother and sister to live in Paris and Alexander visited her there in the following May. It was announced that the Greek constitution did not grant him permission to enter upon the morganatic marriage and that action by the Greek parliament would be necessary to determine whether Mile Manos could become queen of Greece or remain the king's official consort. Alexander's refusal to give up his wife was said to have greatly worried Venizelos and there were reports that the king

could not return to Greece. He did so, however, and witnessed Greek operations in Thrace in the summer of 1920, entering Adrianople, which had been surrendered to the Greek troops, amid a great demonstration.

Alexander was bitten October 3 by the monkey while endeavoring to protect his dog from an attack. His wound became infected, and several operations for the removal of flesh were performed.

Constantine left Athens and took up his residence in Switzerland.

Alexander took the oath of office at Athens in August, 1917, and promised to carry out the policy of his father. This was said to have shocked the entente powers. It soon was reported that he was at odds with Premier Venizelos and had refused to abandon his idea of continuing his father's program. Some doubts were raised as to the advisability of permitting him to assume the throne unless he discontinued what was characterized as an obstructive policy.

Friction Denied.

Reports of lack of harmony between Alexander and Venizelos were circulated in the spring of 1920 but the premier disposed of these in a statement in which he paid tribute to the king's patriotism. One respect in which the king and his premier were said to have been at odds was over the king's moribund marriage to Mile Manos, daughter of a former aide-de-camp to his father, which is said to have taken place in November, 1919. No record of the marriage was obtainable.

The young king and his morganatic wife were childhood friends and sweethearts. Alexander asserted that he had a right to marry whomever he pleased and took his bride to the palace in Athens.

This aroused a storm of discussion which so displeased his wife that in the early part of 1920 she went with her mother and sister to live in Paris and Alexander visited her there in the following May. It was announced that the Greek constitution did not grant him permission to enter upon the morganatic marriage and that action by the Greek parliament would be necessary to determine whether Mile Manos could become queen of Greece or remain the king's official consort. Alexander's refusal to give up his wife was said to have greatly worried Venizelos and there were reports that the king

could not return to Greece. He did so, however, and witnessed Greek operations in Thrace in the summer of 1920, entering Adrianople, which had been surrendered to the Greek troops, amid a great demonstration.

Alexander was bitten October 3 by the monkey while endeavoring to protect his dog from an attack. His wound became infected, and several operations for the removal of flesh were performed.

Constantine left Athens and took up his residence in Switzerland.

Alexander took the oath of office at Athens in August, 1917, and promised to carry out the policy of his father. This was said to have shocked the entente powers. It soon was reported that he was at odds with Premier Venizelos and had refused to abandon his idea of continuing his father's program. Some doubts were raised as to the advisability of permitting him to assume the throne unless he discontinued what was characterized as an obstructive policy.

Friction Denied.

Reports of lack of harmony between Alexander and Venizelos were circulated in the spring of 1920 but the premier disposed of these in a statement in which he paid tribute to the king's patriotism. One respect in which the king and his premier were said to have been at odds was over the king's moribund marriage to Mile Manos, daughter of a former aide-de-camp to his father, which is said to have taken place in November, 1919. No record of the marriage was obtainable.

The young king and his morganatic wife were childhood friends and sweethearts. Alexander asserted that he had a right to marry whomever he pleased and took his bride to the palace in Athens.

This aroused a storm of discussion which so displeased his wife that in the early part of 1920 she went with her mother and sister to live in Paris and Alexander visited her there in the following May. It was announced that the Greek constitution did not grant him permission to enter upon the morganatic marriage and that action by the Greek parliament would be necessary to determine whether Mile Manos could become queen of Greece or remain the king's official consort. Alexander's refusal to give up his wife was said to have greatly worried Venizelos and there were reports that the king

could not return to Greece. He did so, however, and witnessed Greek operations in Thrace in the summer of 1920, entering Adrianople, which had been surrendered to the Greek troops, amid a great demonstration.

Alexander was bitten October 3 by the monkey while endeavoring to protect his dog from an attack. His wound became infected, and several operations for the removal of flesh were performed.

Constantine left Athens and took up his residence in Switzerland.

Alexander took the oath of office at Athens in August, 1917, and promised to carry out the policy of his father. This was said to have shocked the entente powers. It soon was reported that he was at odds with Premier Venizelos and had refused to abandon his idea of continuing his father's program. Some doubts were raised as to the advisability of permitting him to assume the throne unless he discontinued what was characterized as an obstructive policy.

Friction Denied.

Reports of lack of harmony between Alexander and Venizelos were circulated in the spring of 1920 but the premier disposed of these in a statement in which he paid tribute to the king's patriotism. One respect in which the king and his premier were said to have been at odds was over the king's moribund marriage to Mile Manos, daughter of a former aide-de-camp to his father, which is said to have taken place in November, 1919. No record of the marriage was obtainable.

The young king and his morganatic wife were childhood friends and sweethearts. Alexander asserted that he had a right to marry whomever he pleased and took his bride to the palace in Athens.

This aroused a storm of discussion which so displeased his wife that in the early part of 1920 she went with her mother and sister to live in Paris and Alexander visited her there in the following May. It was announced that the Greek constitution did not grant him permission to enter upon the morganatic marriage and that action by the Greek parliament would be necessary to determine whether Mile Manos could become queen of Greece or remain the king's official consort. Alexander's refusal to give up his wife was said to have greatly worried Venizelos and there were reports that the king

could not return to Greece. He did so, however, and witnessed Greek operations in Thrace in the summer of 1920, entering Adrianople, which had been surrendered to the Greek troops, amid a great demonstration.

Alexander was bitten October 3 by the monkey while endeavoring to protect his dog from an attack. His wound became infected, and several operations for the removal of flesh were performed.

Constantine left Athens and took up his residence in Switzerland.

Alexander took the oath of office at Athens in August, 1917, and promised to carry out the policy of his father. This was said to have shocked the entente powers. It soon was reported that he was at odds with Premier Venizelos and had refused to abandon his idea of continuing his father's program. Some doubts were raised as to the advisability of permitting him to assume the throne unless he discontinued what was characterized as an obstructive policy.

Friction Denied.

Reports of lack of harmony between Alexander and Venizelos were circulated in the spring of 1920 but the premier disposed of these in a statement in which he paid tribute to the king's patriotism. One respect in which the king and his premier were said to have been at odds was over the king's moribund marriage to Mile Manos, daughter of a former aide-de-camp to his father, which is said to have taken place in November, 1919. No record of the marriage was obtainable.

The young king and his morganatic wife were childhood friends and sweethearts. Alexander asserted that he had a right to marry whomever he pleased and took his bride to the palace in Athens.

This aroused a storm of discussion which so displeased his wife that in the early part of 1920 she went with her mother and sister to live in Paris and Alexander visited her there in the following May. It was announced that the Greek constitution did not grant him permission to enter upon the morganatic marriage and that action by the Greek parliament would be necessary to determine whether Mile Manos could become queen of Greece or remain the king's official consort. Alexander's refusal to give up his wife was said to have greatly worried Venizelos and there were reports that the king

could not return to Greece. He did so, however, and witnessed Greek operations in Thrace in the summer of 1920, entering Adrianople, which had been surrendered to the Greek troops, amid a great demonstration.

could hardly close her eyes until he is found, and if needs be, she says, she will go all the way back to Little Rock, a distance of 150 miles, on foot, taking her cow with her, to find her "dad." For years Mrs. Daniels has cared for him.

Police are doing all in their power to locate the father.

Put Traffic Cop At Union And Dunlap

Made necessary by heavy congestion of travel, a traffic policeman has been stationed at the corner of Union avenue and Dunlap street, it was announced Tuesday by Secretary John B. Turner, who has charge of traffic regulations.

Traffic signals will be given on the corner with a large metal semaphore, showing red and white lanterns at night. The officer will be stationed on the corner between the hours of 7 and 10 a.m. and 3 to 7 p.m., when traffic is at the heaviest.

Semaphores were formerly used on Main street corners, but were discontinued when it was found that they slowed up travel.

Automobiles have been approaching the corner from the east on Union avenue four abreast, complaints say. This caused a serious delay and inconvenience to traffic coming out of Dunlap street. The policeman will require all cars to approach the corner in single file now.

Claims Kidnaping And Not Fraud Is Cause Of "Death"

FORT WORTH, Tex., Oct. 26.—B. J. Cochran, under arrest at Aspermont, Tex., in connection with an alleged insurance fraud, declared in a statement to Sheriff Bingham that he was kidnaped by a Mexican and held prisoner in New Mexico seven months, and that during his enforced absence his wife, believing her husband dead, collected $10,000 insurance on his life. Cochran, in March, 1919, was reported to have died and been buried near Aspermont. Recently officers examined Cochran's "grave" and found it empty. The grand jury at Aspermont has started an inquiry into the case. Cochran having been taken into custody at Sterling City Saturday.

Cochran's statement, as quoted by Sheriff Bingham and received here, was in substance as follows:

In March, 1919, a strange Mexican came to his home the evening before he was supposed to have died and talked to him about two hours. He believed that the Mexican doped him in some manner. At night he felt bad and thought he was going to die. The last thing he remembered was Dr. William Jordan giving him a dose of medicine.

The next thing he remembered was being chained in a wagon. The Mexican told him that he was going to carry him into Mexico. The Mexican kept him in the wagon several days. Finally he was put in prison somewhere in the western part of New Mexico. He was kept in prison about seven months, fed on bread and water. He saw no one except Mexicans, and they couldn't talk to him.

They took him out one night for a car ride, drove for three or four hours, put him out by the roadside and told him he could go. He walked and rode freight trains until he got to his brother's home in the eastern part of New Mexico. The first town he got to after being freed by the Mexicans was Cathres, N. M.

The first time he knew he was reported dead was when he arrived at his brother's home and was told his wife had collected $10,000 insurance and believed he was dead. The first time he saw his wife after he was taken from home was in February, 1920. When she saw him she fainted.

PLAN T. R. MEETINGS.

CHICAGO, Oct. 26.—Plans for meetings in every county in the State Oct. 27, the birthday of Theodore Roosevelt, have been completed by the Republican national committee. It is announced. Republican speakers will discuss Roosevelt's policies.

Who Will Be President?

We believe the next president of the United States, whoever he may be, will strive to preserve American ideals and advance the best interests of the greatest nation of the world.

We can all do our bit in helping American progress and prosperity by increasing our production and developing our thrift.

This institution offers you its co-operation and invites you to join its banking family. Your building of a thrift account here will serve yourself and your country at the same time.

Bank of Commerce & Trust Co.

Memphis, Tenn.

Capital and Surplus $3,000,000.00.

Continuous 1 to 11 p.m.

Today and Remainder of Week

MADAME X

With PAULINE FREDERICK

Loew-Metro Star Comedian Buster Keaton in "One Week"

See Yourself in Film With Movie Stars Who Attended Loew's State Opening

Augmented Orchestra—Organ

Exclusive First Run Feature Photoplays. Program Changed Weekly.

POPULAR PRICES

AFTERNOONS (Sat. Sun. and Holiday Afternoons) 20c

NIGHTS (Sat. Sun. and Holiday Nights) 40c

Boxes and Loges 50c

War Tax Included

"THE BEST FOR LESS" AT LOEW'S

Today and Tomorrow

The Year's Greatest Screen Sensation

"Love, Honor and Obey"

With Claire Whitney

A Garden of Music

"Bower of Harmony"

Pitzer & Daye

Wells, Virginia & West

Sterling Rose Trio

Townsend, Wilbur & Co.

Made in Memphis

Film of the Opening of LOEW'S STATE

Movie Stars—Memphis Views

PRICES: AFTERNOONS (Sat. Sun. and Holiday Afternoons) 20c

NIGHTS (Sat. Sun. and Holiday Nights) 40c

Boxes and Loges 50c

War Tax Included

"THE BEST FOR LESS" AT LOEW'S

Today and Tomorrow

The Year's Greatest Screen Sensation

"Love, Honor and Obey"

With Claire Whitney

A Garden of Music

"Bower of Harmony"

Pitzer & Daye

Wells, Virginia & West

Sterling Rose Trio

Townsend, Wilbur & Co.

Made in Memphis

Film of the Opening of LOEW'S STATE

Movie Stars—Memphis Views

PRICES: AFTERNOONS (Sat. Sun. and Holiday Afternoons) 20c

NIGHTS (Sat. Sun. and Holiday Nights) 40c

Boxes and Loges 50c

War Tax Included

"THE BEST FOR LESS" AT LOEW'S

Today and Tomorrow

The Year's Greatest Screen Sensation

"Love, Honor and Obey"

With Claire Whitney

A Garden of Music

"Bower of Harmony"

Pitzer & Daye

Wells, Virginia & West

Sterling Rose Trio

Townsend, Wilbur & Co.

Made in Memphis

Film of the Opening of LOEW'S STATE

Movie Stars—Memphis Views

PRICES: AFTERNOONS (Sat. Sun. and Holiday Afternoons) 20c

NIGHTS (Sat. Sun. and Holiday Nights) 40c

Boxes and Loges 50c

War Tax Included